This piece of legislation is so full of loopholes it is quite ineffective. Hunters in Scotland blatantly boast that the exemptions in the Act are allowing them to hunt just as they did before the Act. It seems that all Scottish hunts use the exemption allowing foxes to be flushed to guns.

The 2004 Hunting Act is weak enough and but for the vigilance of monitors, there would be even more infringements. But the Scottish Act is so weak as to be practically useless, which brings Scottish law into disrepute. Please take steps to remove loopholes and make the Act more stringent, so that hunting with dogs in Scotland is properly regulated.
