Dear Lord Bonomy

I am writing this to urge the Scottish Government to totally ban any type of hunting with dogs or at the very least to tighten it up so that it will actually offer protection to our native wildlife!

In its current form it offers no such protection from cruelty!! This should also include a ban on any form of fighting below ground using terriers. This is a particularly nasty activity closely related to hunts up and down the country. I have experienced this going on around our farm on the farmland adjacent to ours and have felt helpless and unable to intervene to stop this disgusting form of animal abuse due to the current law in its present state!

I say this as a country person born and bred and I live in harmony with my resident fox family with no problems whatsoever! (I have kept chickens and small mammals for 40+ years and I make sure they are secure.)

The fox population does NOT need to be "controlled" as they are a self regulating species and do regulate their own numbers very effectively! Thank you for taking the time to read my letter and please show the rest of the U.K. and Other countries around the world what compassion and decency towards the natural world means!!

Yours sincerely

Mrs Caroline Campbell
